LEFT BEHIND IN LIFE'S RACE

Ainus of Northern Japan Furnish an Object Lesson to Peoples Who Refuse to Progress.

If one were to go among the Ainus on the island of Hokkaido, in northern Japan, he would find himself in a stage of departure from pure savagery which parallels the condition of our race as it existed 4,000 years ago, and shows in practice how surely the savage is destined to elimination by any other branch of the human species which advances beyond his stage of co-operation, says the Philadelphia North American. The Ainus, commonly believed to be a lost branch of the whites, have been subject to the more progressive Japanese for ages, and their level, without making close distinction, corresponds to that of some aborigines of Australia, who have been attributed, in their origin, to tribes of adventurers from ancient Chalda.

The Ainus were on their island long before the Japs arrived, and they preserve their original savage customs and superstitions, with a fidelity that is strong evidence of their purity of race and also of the fatal consequences of both customs and superstitions. Yet so strong is the influence of example that they conform in some measure to the more modern life around them. The men pride themselves on being hunters and leave the women to raise the rude crops which eke out their subsistence. But when it is absolutely necessary the men will condescend to take a turn at scratching the surface of the soil. Their worship of the Japs is probably the trait which has made them most widely known; but the bears they catch as cubs and rear as deities fare no better, if as well, as the bears we happen to capture in this country. It is the luck of our bears, very often, to end in comfort, if not in freedom, in a circus or a zoo. But the bears of the Ainu, after being humbly apologized to, are mercilessly slaughtered and enjoyably eaten.

The woman who longs for the times when there were cave-men, with a preference for nice white cave-men to suit her refined nature, can take a trip to Japan and observe the hairy Ainu and his ways—and also the ways of his womenfolk. She will doubtless conclude that she has been born about 4,000 years later than any period which could have met with her approval, even if she is living now 4,000 years ahead of the time when she will feel she is perfectly content with man as civilization has improved him.

When Ade Was Younger.

As a reporter on the old Record in the days before he became known to fame, George Ade's personal charm as well as his striking appearance and sartorial elegance, made him a great favorite with the ladies. One of his assignments took him to a public dance given on the Northwest side, and here he met a young woman, evidently the belle of the ball, who was a waitress in a downtown restaurant. Ade danced with her a number of times and thought that he had made a great impression. This impression was heightened, he thought, when he revealed his identity. It is not every day that a girl of the masses meets a literary gentleman, an iceman or a butcher's boy being perhaps more in her orbit.

What was Ade's chagrin half an hour later, then, to overhear her talking to her girl chum at the table. "My best feller," said the chum, "is a bartender."

"Huh! That's nothing," topped the other; "I got a real swell guy. My beau's a porter on the Record."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

His Duty Done.

The much more general participation in athletics at Yale marks a transition from its former days when only specialists were allowed in the rowing tanks or on the football field.

At a Yale dinner President Hadley, the guest of honor, commented favorably on this change, stating that it brought many more boys into the college activities than in the days of Yale supremacy.

"Of course," he said, "I regret the change of fortune in our specialized athletics—but that reminds me of the story of little Johann of Newtown, Conn. Little Johann lived at one end of the town and his grandfather at the other. One day his grandfather died.

"A stranger passing down the street noticed little Johann playing in the garden, quite as if nothing had happened. Rather shocked at the lad's conduct, he stopped and said: 'Johann, your grandfather is dead.' "The little fellow looked up. 'I know it,' he said, as he resumed his play. 'I've cried.'"

Records of Heavy Rainfalls.

Records of winters in the past bring to light some accounts of excessive rains, for in 1909, a gauge kept at Monumental, in California, registered 153.54 inches. Only at Glenora, Oregon, with a record of 167.29 for a single year, has this rainfall record been exceeded in records for the United States. The heaviest rainfall for a single month ever recorded in the United States was at Helen Mine, California, in January, 1909, when 71.54 inches fell. Campo has the record for the heaviest downpour ever recorded in California for a single day. This was 11½ inches, on August 12, 1891, and all of this fell within 80 minutes. This is far below the American record, however, which is held by Alexandria, Louisiana, with a record of 214-10 inches in a single day.

WATSON COLLECTS DATA.

STATE COTTON CONGRESS MEETS TODAY IN COLUMBIA.

Finds Space to House About 700,000 Bales in South Carolina—Many to Attend Conference.

Columbia, Aug. 20.—There is warehouse space in South Carolina for storing approximately 700,000 bales of cotton, according to a statement issued yesterday by E. J. Watson, president of the Southern Cotton congress.

Complete report on the warehouse space in the State will be made at the meeting of the South Carolina Cotton congress, which will be held in Columbia this morning. The congress will be held in the convention hall of the Jefferson hotel beginning at 11 o'clock.

Farmers, bankers, cotton mill men, cotton seed crushers and others have been invited to attend from all sections of South Carolina. The indications were yesterday that there will be a large attendance.
